

WOOD STORK

Coloring Page

Wood Storks are an overall white bird with some black feathers and black tail. Wood Storks can be found in some areas of the southeast, such as Florida, Georgia, and South Carolina. Their population has decreased due to the destruction of their habitat. Wood Storks are not considered endangered, but are being watched. They make their homes in marshes, ponds, and lagoons. They eat mostly fish, such as minnows and crayfish. Wood Storks will sometimes spit water on their hatched babies to keep them cool in the hot summer. They are not true migratory birds, but some have been seen moving north.
